Mary Anderson Denies.

A dispatch from Los Angeles says that W. R. Daily emphatically denies the story that he is engaged to marry Mary Anderson. He says he is to give the wedding feature of the Bowers-Duvall nuptials, and Mary Anderson and Mrs. Duvall are the principal actors. He says that he has never written Miss Grayman nor Miss Anderson, and that he has never engaged it. While he admits that he has ever exchanged engaging in the manufacture of this day. The high reputation of both gentlemen in their own lines makes the reported relation of the two a matter of interest, although not too near with about exact substitutes.

SHOT DOWN BY A DESPERATE WIFE.

John F. Martin Is the Victim of His Neglected Spouse.

HE HAD SPURNED HER.

The Tragic Denouement of an Actress' Unhappy Marriage.

TROUBLE CAUSED BY DRINK.

Mrs. Martin Committed the Dead Near Chief Crowley's Office in the New City Hall.

Mrs. Susan Martin shot and fatally wounded her husband, John F. Martin, a deputy County Clerk, yesterday morning at 9:20 o'clock in a corridor of the City

JOHN F. MARTIN, THE DEPUTY COUNTY CLERK WHO WAS SHOT BY HIS WIFE

Hall at the entrance to Chief Crowley's office.

The woman is a frail and sickly little thing, upon whose face deep lines of care and worriment have settled, and as she lay sobbing hysterically after the shooting on a cot in the matron's room at the City Prison, she was no more the same broom and pretty girl who as one of the Wilde sisters delighted the audiences at the variety theaters of this City.

Two years ago she married the man she shot yesterday. At that time she and her sister were playing at the Bella Union Theater, where he was working as a bartender for Ned Foster, the proprietor. Subsequently Foster, who married one of the girls, presented Martin with the downstairs barroom, that he might do better for himself and Susie, whom he had asked in marriage.

Martin proved to be a model husband for the first year. Then he had a severe spell of sickness and was laid up for many weeks. His wife watched and nursed him night and day. Dr. D. W. Card, who was in charge, built her up, for she had lost many pounds during the fallen away to a mere skeleton and the soon required the physician's attention herself.

It was at that time that her husband's love for her began to wane, and when he had regained his health he deserted his wife and home and began a series of misdeeds that culminated in driving the woman to attempt his life. He drank very heavily and especially after the first of the month when he would receive his wages for driving for the California patent medicine firm. He had no opera which would invariably leave him a penniless and broken-down man.

Mrs. Martin and a 10-year-old son of her husband by a former marriage frequently had to call upon Ned Foster and his wife for the necessaries of life. Only a few days ago Foster loaned Martin $20, and quite recently the landlord of their home at 545 California street threatened to eject them unless the long overdue rent was forthcoming.

A short time ago Mrs. Martin was taken seriously ill and was sent to St. Mary's O'Keefe's home to be cared for. The latter lady is a sister of Martin and she performed assuming charge of the lad rather than see his starve.

Martin, who secured a position as deputy County Clerk about one month ago, discounted his warrant last Saturday and immediately started out on a debauch. He failed to go home, and on Sunday his wife found him drunk in a low dive in the saloons about the City Hall.

His unfortunate wife, who is in a delicate condition, started out early yesterday morning hunting to find him and take him home. She carried an English bulldog pistol, which she secured some weeks ago from a friend, and after a long search she unsuccessful in finding him and in her vexation she had already many times before said she found her life unbearable and would end it in suicide.

Talking her station on McAllister street, near Larkin, she saw her husband step off the car.

"Jack," she explained, running toward him, "Jack, won't you please come home to me, my heart is just breaking."

A number of people heard the woman's words and saw her sobbing.

Martin barely looked at his wife and in his face a look of anger gathered something unintelligible and passed up the stairs into the hall.

Mrs. Martin followed him closely, appealing to him to stop and listen to her as they proceeded along the corridor.

He finally stopped when he reached the door leading to Chief Crowley's office, turning to his wife, began cursing her in an undertone, saying he did not propose to have her following him around wherever he went. Finally he called her a vile name and, turning on his heels, he started away.

At this moment the woman drew her pistol from her pocket, black she pointed it at his back.

The bullet entered near the middle of his back and took a downward course, making its exit through his abdomen.

Martin fell to the floor and screamed with pain. His wife, seeing him fall, pulled the trigger once more, but the bullet went wide of its mark.

Captain Sullivan, Detectives Crockett and Eagan, who were close at hand, pounced forward and seized the woman. In their endeavor to wrest the weapon from her it went off once more, lodging in the wall.

The officers hurried the woman into the detectives' room, where she became hysterical and fainted. Recovering shortly she became quiet and remained sullen.

"My God, he drove me to it!"

Martin was carried by some of his friends to the Receiving Hospital, where, after examining his wounds, Dr. Fitzgibbon declared them fatal.

Deputy County Clerk Pyne, a close friend of Martin, was notified of the shooting. To this Martin gave the same answer he gave to all other inquiries made later on.

"I don't know who did it. I was shot from behind."

Martin was taken to the prison Mrs. Martin had a letter explaining the matter, but after she was put to bed she refused absolutely to converse excepting with her sister, Mrs. Foster, who was summoned to her side.

"I did not intend killing Jack," she said. "The last drove me to it. For the past year he has driven me almost insane. Night after night he has remained away from me, breaking my heart. I have pleaded with him repeatedly to come home and quit drinking, but he would not listen to me. I have begged for money to buy food with which to live, but I could get it no longer. When I drew the pistol I had no idea of using it against poor myself. I don't know how it occurred—I shot him instead of myself."

Stole Cigars and Whisky.

Some time early Sunday morning thieves entered the store and saloon of Henry Meyer, 214 Front street, and carried away 5000 cigars, gallons of whisky and a barrel of brandy. The robbery was discovered by Meyer when he returned to his store before business hours Sunday night. The robbery was reported to the Central detectives, but up to this time no clew to the guilty parties has been found.

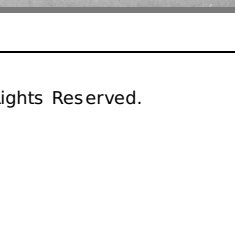
Last of the Emerald Gang.

The charges against A. Swenson, who was connected with the old Emerald smuggling gang, have been dismissed in United States District Court. Swenson was the last member having unlicensed opium in his possession. A man named Yuen, who was apprehended at the same time, has been released on bonds. The others of the gang, excepting F. W. Mclean, are in San Quentin.

Ship Edwards.

James Bennett has libeled the ship W. Edward Jones commander, for a claim of $12,000 for a violation of a contract. The case will be heard in the United States District Court.

MRS. JOHN F. MARTIN.



SHE SINGS IN DARKNESS.

A Young Italian Prima Donna, Who Is Touring the World Alone.

CONCERTIZED IN SIBERIA.

Blindness Compelled Miss Bellafanta to Give Up a Brilliant Operatic Career.

"I am alone and blind, but people have been so kind that I have never felt helpless or helpless."

The girl who said these words yesterday, in her room at the Grand Hotel, was surrounded by outward and visible proofs of the fact that people had not neglected her on account of the total darkness which is slowly but surely settling down upon her beautiful dark eyes. She is a singer who has just arrived here from the Orient, and her room is full of the trophies which admiring audiences gave her on her travels. Lacquered and silver ware, gorgeous embroideries, and, above all, endless ribbons and sashes, which the people of Japan presented with floral tributes. Miss Bellafanta is not quite blind yet; she can discinguish objects when they are held close to her eyes in certain lights, but slowly, day by day, the shadows are gathering deeper round her, and before many months are past the doom of total darkness will be upon her. Even now she does not dare to venture out alone, though she is making the tour of the world by herself and is her own impresario.

The young girl's history is a singularly pathetic one, though it shows what can be achieved by talent and pluck. Estrella Bellafanta, whose father was Spanish and mother Italian, was born in the Italian London angored her and gave her every possible educational advantage. Although rather frail in physique she was found to have a phenomenal voice, and in order that it might have the best musical culture she was taken to Milan, Florence and Naples and placed as a student in the conservatory.

After seven years' study Estrella Bellafanta made a debut which created quite a sensation, even in musical Italy. Her voice, a magnificent mezzo soprano compass, was heard to the best advantage in one, who engaged her for "Carmen" and other operas, of which he possesses the Italian rights. The composer, Pietro Mascagni, was also greatly delighted with the young girl's singing. At that time he was at work on "L'Amico Fritz," and so soon as the score was completed the part was written for her, when the work should be produced.

Meanwhile Miss Bellafanta continued to appear in Milan and Naples with success. One day, in the latter city, when she was singing the role of Zingarella in "La Forza del Destino," she noticed that in the ratcatcher scene, where the leader of the marauders falls on his enemy supposed to be shoulders, the conductor's baton suddenly grew blurred and faded. She went on with her rol., however, and before the ratcatcher was ended, her audience, her eyes, she could see the baton again. A few days later she was totally blind, and her career, as she supposed, and then Miss Bellafanta consulted an oculist.

The specialist's verdict was too grave to be realized or believed, at first. The nerve which connect the eyes with the brain was said to be affected on the left side, and all the medical skill in the world, said the physician, could do nothing to save the sight of that eye. "You must leave the stage entirely, unless you wish to lose the sight of your other eye also," said the doctor.

The girl, who refused to lose such a vocal treasure as Miss Bellafanta, made light of the verdict, and persuaded the singer to continue her engagements. Her diagnosis was if anything more dreadful than the first. Blindness, total and permanent, would be the outcome of the singer. The robbery was reported to the Central detectives early, but up to this time no clew to the guilty parties has been found.

Miss Bellafanta has a number of letters of introduction to residents of San Francisco, and she will be entertained in the capacious of a child what was the character of the Californian people. She will be in the city a week and take out for a walk sometimes, these people who are friends of my friends! This is my first visit to America, and though I cannot see the town, I can feel the air and hear the bustle of the streets. It is lonely to sit in one's room all day, but I have been so much out in the fresh air in Japan, too, the people were charming."

DOCKERY MAKES ARRESTS

Managers of Prominent Hotels Will Be Taken Into Custody To-Day.

The Recently Enacted Milk Ordinance Will Go Into Effect at Once.

Milk Inspector Dockery will swear out warrants to-day for the arrest of J. C. Kirkpatrick, manager of the Palace Hotel; Major Hooper, manager of the Occidental Hotel; General R. H. Warfield, manager of the California Hotel; James Hagerty, grocer, 241 Fourth street; E. Hahn, 230 Fourth street; R. Tardelli, fruit-dealer, 113 Sixth street; J. Meade, coffee-saloon, 20 Sixth street; F. C. Kaufman, grocer, Fourth and Tehama streets; and Paul Christianson, restaurant-keeper, 111 Mason street.

All will be charged with violating the new milk ordinance, which says that all hotel, restaurant or boarding-house keepers, as well as dealers in milk, must obtain permits from the Board of Health to carry on the business.

Dockery's force went into effect some time ago, and the Board of Health decided to give those who came under the measure ample time to take out their permits.

Recently notices were sent out to all those who were delinquent in the matter. Some have complied with the rules and regulations, but those mentioned, as well as many others, have failed to comply, and their arrest will be followed by many more.

The newspapers are going to be determined to combat the ordinance, and will AID FROM THE FAIRIES.

The Children's Hospital Operetta Is in Preparation at Alameda.

AN ORIGINAL MUSICAL WORK.

It Is a Bright and Catchy Production, With Libretto by Miss Lies of This City.

An original operetta written by Miss Camilla E. Lies, a young lady of this City, is to be produced at Alameda on April 17. The object is to endow a bed in the Children's Hospital, the same to be known as the "Alameda Bed."

Mrs. Charles L. Tilden of Alameda is the promoter and manager of the affair. Miss Stella Lies, a sister of the author of the libretto, is drilling the choruses. Miss Isabelle McCurrie is the director of scenery and will act as stage manager. Miss Gamble is drilling the fairy dances. Miss Clara Fisher will have charge of the stage settings.

The operetta is to be presented entirely by children under 14 years of age, but the principal singers have already established local reputations for proficiency.

In the story of the "Rival Queens," that being the name of the operetta, it is told that Prince Leon, becoming separated from his companions while hunting, falls asleep in the fairies' bower. He is found by Nightshade, who was once an attendant of Rose, Queen of the fairies, but being banished for her fondness for the goblins, who made her their Queen.

Nightshade, discovering the Prince to be her household, and in wearing a magic spell over him, that her goblins may bear him away, is suddenly interrupted by Tells, an elf, page to Queen Rose, whose presence destroys the spell. The Prince expresses to Tells a wish to see the Fairy Queen, but Tells informs him that as yet the Queen has not as yet been seen by mortal eye, but is promised safety if he will resign himself to Tella's care. At midnight the fairies hold their revels.

Of course, on beholding the handsome Queen the Prince forgets his promise and declares his love for Rose.

This basis disclosing the Queen, the Prince is ordered from the court. At this fairy meeting Queen Rose announces that the day has arrived when, according to law, she must choose a consort or lose her throne, and must wander on earth in the guise of a beggar. The reward of any one doing her a kindness during her wanderings will be the granting of the greatest heart wish of that person.

The opening of the second act is at the Court of Queen Rose, where, attended by her high train, have captured Queen Rose and drag her to the foot of Nightshade's throne. Tella's arrival interests the goblins, distracts their attention from the captive queen and leads to a proposal for indulgence in goblin wine. Tella drugs the wine, and the goblins succumb in the fashion as they imagine.

In act 3 Prince Leon is discovered alone in the fairies' bower. Nightshade arrives and seeks to lead him away. Refusing he is bound by her summoned goblins and released again by Tella. This enables the Prince to rescue Rose from the cave of gypsy by some of his noble lords. He is thanked by the gypsy and promised his dearest wish and will be known again at midnight. At that time and place the poor costume of the gypsy is suddenly removed. Queen Rose is herself and the union of the Prince is accepted. That ends the story.
