Tom Fetch Tells of Trials of an Auto Over The Alkali Plains

R. Tom Fetch arrived home Wednesday from New York after having driven a Packard motor car from San Francisco to New York City, says the Warren Tribune. In speaking of the trip, Mr. Fetch said:

"To say that the trip was a hard one hardly expresses it. The pictures sent home show very bad places along the road but photographs of even worse roads cannot do justice to it. It was hard, very hard, and in a trip that I would not care to make again. Not only was it hard driving, but the physical strain caused by worrying over the bad outlook at times was intense.

"The worst roads we struck were through the Utah desert and between Cotton and Grand Junction, Colo. The Nevada desert was not nearly so bad as had been reported to us and the Utah desert was about seven times worse. Between Grand Junction and Glenwood Springs, Colo. quite hard and the water made the alkali roads just like soap. In some places the road was so slippery that I could not steer at all. The front wheels instead of turning would simply slide and one of the party had to go along in front to help guide the machine. In these places we had chains wrapped around the rear wheels to control them. The roads through the alkali plains in Utah were without doubt the worst on the whole trip. They had been washed out by recent rains until they were literally filled with gullies, some of them ten feet deep. These were almost regular, about one hundred foot gaps throughout the entire desert and we had to take them as they came, for had we left the road to find fewer of them the chances were that they would have been even more numerous. There were times going down and up in these gullies that the strain on the machine was awful, and I was afraid something would break. In 'Old Pacific' stood it all and was in first class condition when we pulled into New York.

"It was in Utah that we had most of our troubles. At Salt Lake City C. D. Roberts who was to have been our guide but who was discharged at San Francisco before we started, got an attachment against the machine, and tied us up there for three days. Roberts' idea in waiting until we reached Salt Lake City before attaching the machine, was that he is a Mormon and wanted to do it in Utah where most of his friends were. After the incident the Mormon papers and people certainly

WAGON WHEELS GET FARMERS INTO COURT

A Break Down on The Road and Subsequent Discovery Causes a Tangle In Litigation.

A couple of wagon wheels were wrecked by an intermediary, and at once filed charges in justice Wimmer's court, alleging theft of two wheels valued at $3.

Mr. Lawrence at once pleaded guilty, although he says he simply appropriated the wheels as a matter of convenience, having no intention of stealing them. He paid Mr. Geiger $2 for the wheels, and also $1.50 for the costs to the square. Mr. Lawrence stated that he had been too busy to notify Mr. Geiger, but that under the circumstances he felt justified in taking anything that came handy to keep him out of his predicament.
