Sheridan Master of the Situation at Baldwin's.

A BIG WEEK AT THE BUSH.

The Standard Boys in Minstrelsy-The Tivoli -A Musical Week - Future Announcements-General Notes.

This has been a notable week at the Baldwin Theatre, where the production of Tom Taylor's play, "The Fool's Revenge," has drawn large and intelligent audiences. On Monday evening Mr. Sheridan labored under some disadvantage. It was not only his first essay in the role of Bertuccio, but he was in a condition of nervous irritability, excited by the unprofessional advertising methods employed by an upstart at another house, who has spent the week bellowing through the who has spent the week bellowing through the same role, and has taken very queer ways to let the public know it. Mr. Sheridan, therefore, opened his performance with more vehemence and pitched it in a higher key than the text would justify, or than he has employed on subsequent nights; yet even on Monday the still greater vehemence and elevation required in the crucial scene of the third act were not lacking, and the deep and quiet tenderness of the scene with his daughter was a delightful contrast to what preseded and what followed. We have nothing to add now to the high praise which we bestowed upon the Fiordelisa of Miss Louis Davenport, the Manfredi of Mr. Osbourne, the Serafino of Mr. Mainhall and the interpretation of the other roles. "The Fool's Revenge" will be given to-night for the last time. On Monday evening "Louis XI" will be produced, with Mr. Sheridan in his well-known personation of the hypocritical king.

The business of this week at the Bush-street The business of this week at the Bush-street Theatre has been the largest, we believe, within the experience of the present management, and the causes of the rush for admission are not far to seek. The Emerson's World's Fair Company, while often surpassed here on the minstrel side, includes some brilliant specialists, whose performances contribute to what is, on the whole, a wonderfully attractive programme. The great Emerson himself has not yet appeared, and the ends of the semi-circle are occupied respectively by Billy Courtright and Bob Slavin, the latter, however, having been much out of voice during part of the week. H. W. Frillman, reappearing in black after a brief but useful operatic career, holds the centre, and lets out his noble voice in "I Fear No Foe," while Ben Clark gives "Robin Adair" in fine style, and T. Wilmot Eckert, after an operatic experience by no means brief, appears in the pretty song, "I Will Return." The first part is closed by the Martens family—Marie, Emma and Adolph—in Tyrolean costume, who give several songs, each announced with indescribable qaintness by Adolph, and sung with good effect, winning repeated encores. In the olio, James Tierney and C. W. Wayne first appear in their grotosque acrobatic manipulations, executed with true Japanese recklessness of danger to limb; the final use of the hatchet, however, is shocking rather than amusing, and should have been prohibited. Geo. H. Wood, in his songs and stories, full of rich humor, is followed by Silvo, the Innovator, who, as a graceful adept in the art of balancing objects, has never been approached here, and gives a trait marvelous performance. Bob Slavin comes next Theatre has been the largest, we believe, within as a graceful adept in the art of balancing objects, has never been approached here, and gives a traity marvelous performance. Bob Slavin comes next in his specialties, and is succeeded by a really charming and accomplished ventriloquist, Duncan, whose bright smile and refined manner add no little effect to the quaint and witty dialogue and songs of his marionettes. Callan, Haley and Callan, the Electric Three, appear in songs, dances and acrobatic acts, with great effect, and the programme concludes with the celebrated (at Duett, by Marie and Adolph Martens (in evening dress), a lifelike and laughable imitation. A new programme on Monday evening.

At Emerson's Theatre, the Standard Minstrels have held their own handsomely against the attraction across the way, and have given an admirtraction across the way, and have given an admirable programme this week, the first-part introducing Seamon and Girard as additional end-men, with more of their matchless dancing; James J. Kelley, a new tenor, with a thin, but very pleasant voice, winning a nightly encore in "A Boy's Best Friend Is His Mother;" W. F. Bishop, for the first time this season, in "Little Sailor Tom;" Carroll Johnson in "Pat Mahone;" Wetter and Reed in last week's songs, of which the public had not heard enough; and the finale of "Sim Dempsey's Visit," with Seamon, Girard and Hawkins. In the second part, Gus Mills and Carroll Johnson appear in "Lost," a laughable interlude; Charley Reed gives a new crazy-quilt specialty; Seamon and Girard do a very funny Brother Act; Elwood, in a handsome new dress, gives last week's songs, in a handsome new dress, gives last week's songs, always acceptable; and the farce, "A Bushel of Bad Boys," winds up the evening. For Bad Boys," winds up the evening. For next Monday evening is announced a programme full of novelties by Reed, Girard, Johnson, Seamon, Mills and Elweod, a new act by Seamon and Girard, entitled, "May the Best Man Win," introducing their challenge clog, and Seamon's afterpiece, "Rapid Transit, or Frisco to New York in Five Minutes."

At the Tivoli Opera House, the revival of "The Little Duke" has drawn good houses, in spite of the strong attractions elsewhere; in fact, this favorite theatre has a clientele which never fails. On Monday evening Gound's grand opera, "Faust," will be revived, with Signor Baldanza, the favorite tenor, and Signora Zeppilli, the charming contralto, in the cast, otherwise including the strength of the company.

The invitation musicale given last Tuesday eve ning by Mr. and Mme. Rosewald filled Irving Hall to overflowing with their guests, and the Hall to overflowing with their guests, and the programme was worthy of the occasion. Dismissing the rather uninteresting duetts for two pianos by Messrs. Espinosa and Kelley, and the neat but colorless rendering of the Chopin Andante, "Spinato e Polonaise," by Mr. Espinosa (who was heartily recalled), the rest of the numbers had epecial interest and value, and were enjoyed with keen appreciation. The singing of Mme. Julie Rosewald, in the Mozart "Concert Aria" and the "Artot Variations Concertant," was a maryelous friumph over enormous difficul-Mme. Julie Rosewald, in the Mozart "Concert Aria" and the "Artot Variations Concertant," was a marvelous friumph over enormous difficulties, accomplished with delightful ease and sense of power in reserve. If the lady's voice have lost something of its first freshness, she is incomparably finer in an artistic sense than she was nine years ago. As an encore for her first song (an encore accompanied by a profusion of exonisite flowers) she gave Sullivan's "Birds in the Night." She was also on the programme for four brief songs in as many different styles and languages—"The Gretchen am Spinrad," of Schubert (German), a mazourka of Chopin, "Viardot" (French), Rubenstein's "King Grown Old (English), and the "Russian Nightingale" of Alabieff" (Italian)—all done with fine feeling and heartily applauded. Mr. J. H. Rosewald, heretofore known to us only as an efficient conductor, came forward on this occasion as a violinist, and evinced qualities which made his performance thoroughly enjoyable. His tone is singularly sympathetic, his intonation accurate, his technique never obtrusive, but always ample, his manner modest, and his whole attitude that of a true musician. His selections were the Second Polonaise (Opps 21) of Wieniawski, with a bright thing, not familiar to us, for an encore; the Love Song of Hauser, a Tarantelle by Holzhaus, and the Cradle Song of Reber; and his share in the artot variations-concertant, to which, by the way, he has added cadenzas, which were executed in perfection by voice and violin. Mr. Kelly, who was to have played the accompaniments, was compelled by indisposition to yield all except those of the short violin pieces to Señor Arrilaga, who kindly consented, at the last moment, and played them with his usual care and sympathy.

Written by Donizetti for Grisi, Mario, Tamburini, and Lablache, and produced at Paris January 4, 1843, the brilliant gaiety of "Don Pasquale" has made it everywhere a favorite, yet in San Francisco it has been heard with comparative infrequency. It was done two or three times in 1868 by Parepa, Testa, Ferranti, and Sarti; and in 1875 it was given with Mme. Franzini, a contralto, in the baritone role of Malatesta, and a cast otherwise obscure. Its production last Friday evening at Platt's Hall, for the benefit of Mme. Marie Godini (Mrs. Mary E. Wadsworth-Goodwin), tendered by prominent citizens, attracted an andience less numerous than was to be expected, but fashionable and critical, including many resident professors, among whom we observed Signor and Signora Bianchi, Mme. Zeiss-Dennis, Herr Formes, Signor Dama, and Signor Magcusi. It Written by Donizetti for Grisi, Mario, Tamwas not a demonstrative audience, however, the applause being reserved for a very few of the gems in the score. Signor Laigi Lencioni, the new buffo, for twenty years past well known in the East, and lately a member of the Godini-Brignoli troupe, made his first appearance here as Don Pasquale, and displayed a superb bass voice, great volubility, and some handsome costumes, and the conventional comic methods, among which the laborious picking up of the letter was too prolonged (especially as his make-up did not include an inconvenient embompoint), and excited no langhter; his singing, however, was thoroughly enjoyable, and the interpolated comic song, "La Mora," composed for him by the great meestro, Paolo Giorza, was delivered with great effect, and was imperatively encored. Signor Baldanza, as Ernesto, and Signor Contini, as Dr. Malatesta, were in evening dress; they sang but fairly, and their acting lacked vivacity. Signor Baldanza would not accept an encore for the well-known serenade. Mme. Godini, whose coquettish style fo beauty especially suits the role of Norina, acted better than she sang, her voice being rather metallic, and her execution manifestly unequal to some of the not very difficult runs that occur in her numbers. Although the beneficiary, she received but scanty recognition, either on her first appearance or after her songs. Her third costume was exceedingly handsome. M. Charles Morel, whose good voice gave effect to the short part of the Notary, completed the cast. The scenery was meagre, there was no chorus (which, indeed, is not essential to this opera), and the orchestra, a small one, was supplemented by a piano. Signor Spadina was the conductor, and the performance in general went smoothly.

PASSENGER LISTS.

RELIGION IN POLITICS.

Rev. Dr. Bettelhelm's Arraignment of the Protestant Clergy.

Rev. Dr. Bettleheim delivered a striking and interesting discourse yesterday at the Jewish Synagogue, on Mason street, between Geary and Post, upon the subject of "Religion in Politics." The speaker began by saying that it was not too late to thank God for the blessings and mercies bestowed on our country and State, nor too late to join all the loyal Americans in their fervent thanksgivings for peace undisturbed, prosperity unchecked, and progress untramelled, which has blessed this land. Speaking of the future is unchecked, and progress untramelled, which has blessed this land. Speaking of the future universal worship of the one true God, he said that when that time comes, we will probably not have the same form of religion or mode of worship we now practice, and that memorial days now so highly cherished will be cast into oblivion. New forces and new factors will be added to the dimly-burning religions flame, and science and art will command the great army of believers to gather around the flag of enlightened rational religion. "I believe," said he, "that religion and morality shall reign supreme and control human actions, private and public. I believe that religion should pervade all national endeavors and intentions; but I also believe that CHURCH AND STATE

CHURCH AND STATE

Should remain separated forever, and neither encroach upon the privileges of the other. I approve it, for the reason that religion, if uninfluenced by politics, and religious denominations, if left entirely to their intrinsic merits, will have a wider scope to earn the approval or disapproval of the masses, and thus become the religion of the fature, or be lost among the nations of the past into oblivion. *  During the last election religion did not stand like a good mother, blessing and encouraging her rival children in the combat of honor, but stood like a Xantippe, scolding, interfering, intermeddling in private affairs, denouncing and defaming her own children. Christian ministers had lately the audacity to defame the private character of a Presidential candidate. The very State in which the social misdemeanor was said to have been committed gave him a majority of votes, and did not believe her own ministers. This most abused man is now our President-elect; and religion, if this is religion, has suffered well-earned rebuke. Not only the ministers were beaten by the voice of the people, but I say

RELIGION IN HER DIVINE DIGNITY HAS SUFFERED

RELIGION IN HER DIVINE DIGNITY HAS SUFFERED Thereby greatly—yea, was beaten. Religion was dragged by her own upholders from the pulpit to the political platform, where slander and ungodly jokes were inflaming the wild passions of man. And now, when many will become estranged from or indifferent to religion, these very pious slanderers will denounce again those who have turned their backs on unministerial conduct, or on a religion so badly protected."

The speaker then referred with pride to the fact that no Jewish minister had been guilty of such conduct. After paying a tribute of praise to the Jewish people for their manly principles in voting, regardless of party, for that which promises security to Bepublican institutions, free schools, etc., the speaker continued: "No minister has a right to misuse his station as a messenger of peace and use it for political purposes. As a citizen, he has a right to vote early, but not often. And he would vote often if he intimidated his members to vote with him for a certain candidate or party." or party.' POLITICAL ORATORS.

He said, sometimes make good and eloquent min-He said, sometimes make good and eloquent ministers, but ministers' seldom make good politicians. Henry Ward Beecher is an exception to this rule. The speaker praised him for the manly courage he had shown in opposing brethren of his own creed and in defending frover Cleveland. But even a Beecher would not be tolerated by a Jewish congregation if he dared to drag politics into the pulpit. The speaker closed with an eloquent peroration upon the land we live in, its perfect liberty, unrestricted freedom, which gives to man a wider scope for thinking—a full manhood in the deepest sense of the word. This freedom will be the pedestal upon which the glorions religion of the future will establish her throne, and, with the crown of science and art, bless the world. with the the petestat upon which the glorious religion of the future will establish her throne, and, with the crown of science and art, bless the world. Freedom, the fairest daughter of mankind, will remove all the rubbish which the middle ages have piled up on our sand navies; it will lay hands on many a ceremony which is dear to our heart. There will be for a long time a whining and lamenting amongst the priests and their bigoted followers, but the final triumph is certain. All the non-essentials may disappear. They have outlived their utility; mankind will not miss them. But one thing will forever remain, man himself, man as the image of God. Man will not destroy himself and his divine origin. He will always endeavor to be a memorial of God. That religion which will come from free and noble manhood, purity and kindness of heart will have a future. The speaker then prayed for the President in office, and for the President in office, and for the President.
