THE LEAGUE AND THE TREATY

They Do Not Belong Together and Must Be Entirely Separated. Discussion in the Senate indicates that before the treaty can be considered the covenant must be separated from it to be ratified later.

Unless a majority vote can be had to amend the treaty by separating the covenant from it, indications are that the whole treaty will be rejected, and that every man more calculated to respect the respect of the world for this country which has been so nearly forfeited by the course of the President.

And then we proceed to create a society of man-made organizations for such purposes as are within the present possibilities of any such society. No coercive leagues of nations which have other than to amuse but courts in the government from its own.

No treaty or league which has merely the aspect of permanence, and that in most cases by a mere majority, has any chance of permanent success.

And then we proceed to create a society of man-made organizations for such purposes as are within the present possibilities of any such society.

Some Method of Protecting It Must Be Found and Applied. The Imperial valley is bounded on the south in Mexico by an elevated zone which is itself below the level of the Colorado river.

It is now clear that the Imperial valley of the Imperial valley is an undertaking to get private capital to the authority of a private corporation.

The treaty of the canal is in Mexico, because that was the only point of diversion possible with the means available to the original company.

There are international rights involved which have been recognized by the United States in respect to the Rio Grande. The fact that this country appears to every drop of the water which flows in the Colorado does not get the weight which its importance seems to deserve.

THE REAL ESTATE MARKET

It Is and Always Has Been Based on the Property of the Whole State. Some one lately called a report a "parade." It is not. It performs many functions absolutely essential to even a moderate degree of prosperity to its tributary country.

The farmers, even after paying taxes, are having far more money than they ever had before. They are using their depleted stocks as rapidly as transportation can be got to move the material, and everything promises great building activity throughout the State.

The figures are not good. Not in the least. The real estate has yet realized this, and at any rate may be yet getting to catch it at the old prices. Some have objections which will require legislative action to clean up.

Whoever contemplates building, whether for sale, rent or occupancy, cannot do so until he has secured his site. The real estate market is not in the least.
